Follow Presentation

Location

Bloomington High School North
Library

Date

June 2, 2008
7:00 to 8:30 p.m.

Please join us for a community conversation designed to specifically address the educational needs of the middle level student. Jim Snapp, a recognized expert on educating students in the middle years, will discuss insights gained during a long career as a teacher, principal, and administrator.

Dr. Snapp has actively promoted education focused on the needs of the young adolescent in schools and believes that these students are not given the credit they deserve or challenged as they should be in many schools designed for them.

He will share his experiences evaluating and designing schools for middle level students and help us define what to expect in a good middle school. Topics addressed will include how to configure a classroom to support the unique needs of the middle school mind, what students need in order to learn during these critical years, and the differences between Middle School and Junior High.

Please plan to attend. Childcare Provided.
